Invasion of the Body Part Snatchers Documented By WHN in Lower B.C.*

White Rock (WHN) While stories of alien abductions have long been discounted by the Canadian scientific community, recent events in the lower BC* area have raised the prospects that Alien body snatchers, or at the very least, Alien organ snatchers, are operating in our midst. These findings were directly confirmed by the WHN in a bizarre incident involving the theft of one appendix from WHN founder and editor Mark Scott.

According to Mr. Scott, intruders broke into the International Headquarters of the highly respected World Headline News. Using some form of alien cheese ray, the intruders distracted the highly trained guard dog (Bob, formerly famous for dating Princess Di) prowling the premises. Following the immobilization of the WHN security service, the intruders then tackled Mr. Scott: "It felt like my midsection had been crushed by a pair of 360 lb (163 kg) tackles from the evil Oakland Raiders." While valiantly attempting to defend earth's Honor (see artists rendering of Ms. Honor in the clutches of the evil raiders), Mr. Scott was eventually overwhelmed by the "damn raiders" at which time his body was violated. Using an unknown medical instrument (clearly shown in the WHN surveillance photos) the internal organs of Mr. Scott were probed and prodded for what turned out to be nefarious reasons. Surprisingly, it appears that the aliens were after Mr. Scott's appendix. But WHY?

Dr. Ned Ander-Thal of the UBC Department of Alien Studies has put forward a possible answer. According to Dr. Ander-Thal, "The human appendix is an alien delicacy. In human terms I would characterize it as a cross between a Nathan's Hotdog and an anchovie. Indeed, my studies suggest that humans are nothing but a 'cattle crop' for these aliens - an exotic species put on this planet to breed and make this tasty delicacy. With great regularity, these alien human herders come among us and cull the tastiest appendices that they can find." Concurring with this hypothesis is the well known Dr. Amanda Bradley, who studied aliens at the infamous Albanian Medicinal College. "Humans are just like the wild boars introduced in Quebec for hunting and now breeding out of control. If we are to strike back at these beings from another world, I think maybe France, then we should stop breeding today."

Editor Scott, who is recuperating in the south of Canada, does not dismiss the alien theories, "After a syringe full of morphine, everyone looked like aliens. All I know is that I now need an appendix transplant and am on the donor list."

Solving the Organ Donor Crisis? Criminal Innovation?

Beijing (WHN) Today millions of Canadians are in need of organ transplants. Sure, most of you know about heart, kidney, and liver transplants, but most Canadians are ignorant of the hundreds of thousands of individuals needing the lesser organs like the gall bladder, tonsils and most of all the appendix. In a shocking failure of the the much vaunted Canadian Health Care system, virtually no effort is being made to make these organ-less patients whole again. Imagine the agony and, to be blunt, the embarrassment, of going through life without an gall bladder, or (gasp!) an appendix. So what can be done to correct this horrible situation? China may hold the answer to this growing problem.

Studies by Dr. Ned Ander-Thal of the University of Brainy Collegiants (UBC) say that much can be learned by his studies of "the Chinese multi-disciplinary system created by the combination of the medical and penal systems. As a consequence of this 'multi-disciplinary' approach, few Chinese go in want of a major or minor organ transplantation". How is this done? According to Dr. Ander-Thal, this highly cost effective approach combines the judgement of society, or at least the Peoples Liberation Army, with meeting the medical needs of octogenarian leadership ranks and "even the lowly peasant in need of a kidney or even an appendix." Using a simple formulation (one 9 mm Glock pistol knockoff and one blind fold) Chinese medical personnel, in conjunction with their military suppliers, are able to meet the needs of multiple people yearning for organ replacements. This research was driven by the loss of Chairman Mao who, according to sources within China, could have been saved by a steady stream of organ donations - new heart, new lungs, new appendix. This belief has not been lost on Western leaders.

Private Sector Organ Transplantation. How Is It Done?

From the White Rock Police Files

According to the White Rock Police, the typical modus operandi of the theft of human organs is relatively simple. Gangs of gorgeous criminal women are employed by aging, sick, white males (many are senators or congressmen) and stationed at local upscale bars where they lay in wait for any man, usually from out of town and lonely, sitting alone. The beautiful woman approaches the always gullible male and strike up a conversation. After a few drinks, the woman invites the man up to her room. She puts on some romantic music and makes drinks (upscale hotels are crucial due to the need for the 'min-bar'). She hands the man the drink, he takes a sip, and he blacks out. The organ donor is ready.

However, because the organ procurers and their ultimate customers are not truly evil, they do not kill the victim. Rather, they stabilize the patient such that upon regaining consciousness, the victim discovers he is lying in a bathtub full of ice. There's a telephone nearby, with a note attached, telling him not to move and to call 911 immediately. The man calls 911 and reports that he is groggy and sitting in a bathtub full of ice. Fortunately, because of the crack (ye,s we are trying to get them to switch to heroin) training of our emergency operators, the paramedics are immediately dispatched for this all too typical victim. Based on customer demand, the victim most often discovers that at least one kidney and typically either the appendix or tonsils have been harvested.

North American leaders, including John Ashcroft, Junior Bush, and Gordon Campbell, have all expressed interest in this "melding of body and justice". John Ashcroft is quoted as saying he needed a heart, Junior Bush wants a brain, and Gordon Campbell requires Union-Busting courage. According to Dr. Ander-Thal's research, all of these transplants and more can be achieved from "a single enemy of the state." This economically friendly approach to organ donation will subsequently reduce Western Medicine's reliance on "private-sector" organ procurers - those individuals (usually voluptuous females) hired by wealthy individuals to search out the lonely tourist, "befriending them" and drugging their drinks and then surgically removing the organ(s) of interest.
